Palace of Ferdinand Cheval in the city of Hauterive (France)

This amazing house is the creation of a French postman. This is incredible, but without special education Ferdinand Cheval conceived and implemented the work of a lifetime. For his house he was looking for and carefully selected stones. In the construction used only cement and wire. His house is a fusion of many styles and different cultures of East and West. It is fair to say that the construction took him 33 years of life. In 1969, his extraordinary house received the status of a monument and became the main attraction of the town. Having gained fame, the author wished to be buried only in his Palace, but was refused, after which the resourceful Ferdinand built a family crypt in the same style with the house, where he rests to this day. The uniqueness of the house is in its "soul", it is multifaceted, like the whole world, every nation will see something in it from its culture.

Shoe-shaped house

The shoe-shaped house serves as a museum and is intended for tourists so that they can learn about the history of this area and see an exhibition of paintings by the owner himself, who is an artist. In addition to paintings at the exhibition are sculptures of wood and stone. This house also serves as an entrance to the cave, which appeared many years ago in a vision of the artist and he arranged it in seven rooms. The last room serves as a chapel in which you can play a wedding.

the home robot

The architect of the "House robot" Umsi Samet, the head of the company, has received an order for construction of a new building from the Bank, faced with an unusual task. It was necessary to build an office for a financial Corporation, so it was clear that the Bank pays great importance to computer technology. Breaking your head over the implementation of this idea, Samet Umsi saw that the decision on the surface – literally in the hands of his son playing with a robot-transformer. The idea was put into practice. There was a stepped building with a torso, hands, head and even antennas-antennae. Mind really is a real robot. Subsequently, the " toy " creation brought the architect world fame.
